

Hello Robert,

My name is Fiorella. I'm Manuela's granddaughter. I'm very glad to write this letter, because i feel like I know you a little bit (because of what my grandmother said about you). How was the food you prepared? Hope you found all the ingredients. Well, im going to introduced myself.

I have 28 years, I'm from Lima. I studied photography couple of years ago. Right now I work as a photographer (what a surprise!) and well, thinking about study something new. I don't know, probably a career that help me understand this crazy world (Maybe Anthropology) who knows, maybe in a few years, I will become an anthropologist or a Cheff (so I can help my grand mother making a cooking book!). You know, Lima is a hard place to live. Sometimes I just get tired of it. I mean, I like my city and I love Perú, but right now in my city (which is Lima) there is so much caos, of course is our fault, because if we make an effort, probably we would be ~~more~~ happier than now. Every time or most of the time, when I'm out (walking in the street) I see thing that pissed me of. like when someone throw a paper or any garbage to the floor (instead of the trash can) or when people don't respect traffic signs. It is hard to not react, when you see things that you don't like. But, if someone react, it does but in the worst way (like shouting or saying bad words) and at the end, everything goes wrong.

People always say that the government has the fault. I mean, everything has to be around the government, but I bet that if we instead of being the typical acuser, we really have the force of became less aggressive and instead of blame and fight or even ignored we realized that the change depends of us and how we can help even in a little action, we can make a difference. How is Viena in those aspects? Did you feel like there are some things about your place you would like to change? Is there people with very different way of being? Do you have poverty? In Lima we do. Lima is a little mix of all cultures in Perú. In a way that is great, the possibility to reunite different people and way of thinkings, but there is a bad thing about it. The bad thing is that not everybody like different people, and that is when exclusion begins. You can see, (not always) but most of the time, divisions (not only because of money) but because of where are you from. I know you would say "that is ridiculous, you all peruvians!!" But it is true, there are some peruvians, that don't like peruvians, or some peruvians that would like to be from other places, or peruvians that are in love with foreign people. You see, that's why I need to keep studying, to understand ~~how~~ how this world works. I don't know if you ever going to write me back but I hope (if not), unless you would think about what I said.

Take care Robert
best wishes

Ernesto
